SUNG HONOR COULD $6,000

Second Trial of Action Brought Against Andrew S. Stevens

Started in the Superior Court—Is Charged With Carrying Away Food Which Did Not Belong to Him.

It is expected that the $6,000 damage action brought against Andrew S. Stevens, New Haven by the Parker Davenport company will be completed in the superior court today (Wednesday), as there is but one witness for the defense to be heard. The case was started in the superior court at New London on Tuesday. It is an action for damages brought against Stevens, formerly cook at the Wauregan house, this city, who is charged with carrying off the food which did not belong to him, and the damages are estimated at $6,000. His account amounting to about $4,000 and an deposit in two local banks has been attached. The defendant claims that all he carried away belonged to him, as he used the food for his meals outside the hotel. B. Woodworth and Henry D. Johnson testified as to the amount of money which the defendant has on deposit in the local banks.

Henry B. Davenport testified, and he was followed by George E. Pitcher, Stevens' attorney. Stevens made out the hotel kitchen and its approach. Joseph C. Bland was another witness for the hotel, and the plaintiffs were Mary E. Stapleton. Counsel for the defense stated that they had but one witness to introduce, and as the testimony is expected to be brief the case will probably be completed Wednesday.
